grandmother making memories with her grandson

GREENSBORO, NC; February 2, 2020—First-time author Jo Ann Warren has written a book targeted for readers from two to five years old. Enticing photos and brief, simple text provide the hallmarks of this engaging nonfiction picture book. Throughout the story, Jo Ann “allows readers to see the world through her grandson’s beautiful young eyes and kind loving heart.”

Each color-coded, front-and-back pair of pages presents a new, fascinating place the author and her grandson visited. The repetitive text “Gigi, look!” introduces readers to each locale. Listeners and readers alike will have to wait until they turn the page to discover where Jo Ann and her grandson are.

This duo’s fun adventures follow the course of the seasons, so that provides an adult who’s reading this book aloud an opportunity to talk about the seasons of the year with young listeners. Places visited include an apple orchard, a food market, a city with tall buildings, a restaurant, a dairy farm where the two enjoy ice cream, a basketball game in a park, and a museum where her grandson plays a valiant knight in search of a princess.

Further adventures take them to the shore where they watch the waves, a very old mill with a stone building and fences, the beach, an outdoor concert with a pizza picnic, and a sandbox in the yard filled with multitudes of little toys.

“Jo Ann has been a fascinating educator for more than 40 years. I am so excited that she has written this book! For so many of her students, she was a third parent, and her studio was a second home. Sharing the experiences with her grandson is priceless. I wish every Gigi [would] love and [be] loved just as much.”
—Paula

Because Jo Ann owns a renowned performing-arts school in Massachusetts, she and her grandson also visit a stage at a dance recital, which Jo Ann has done countless times over the course of decades of teaching dance. Her grandson is delighted and proud to perform his dance number for her.

Since the author “spends every minute possible living life to the fullest and making more memories with her grandson,” this picture book is a joyous celebration of their experiences together.
